Dear Ms. Jesse:

I am glad to see that the Government and Microsoft have agreed to settle the anti-trust case. It seems to have something for all parties.

Microsoft can get back to work. IT providers, including Microsoft's competitors get guaranteed access to technical specifications. Computer manufacturers who equip their computers with Microsoft's OS get flexibility on what they can install. Finally, for those who'd doubt Microsoft would comply with this agreement, there is an enforcement mechanism to respond to complaints about Microsoft.

What more can we reasonably ask for? I think this settlement is appropriate in its scope and I hope that the court accepts it.

Sincerely,

Tom Gjerde
